Grassroots political movement “UTW” to launch June 29

Non-partisan effort aims to peaceably reform US Government

(June 22, 2026)—Not all protests are symbolic. On June 29, a Boston-based activism team will be launching a political movement, newsletter, podcast, and video series titled *Unf*cking The World* (UTW). The aim of UTW is to gather the voices of every American who is angry that the Federal Government is allowed to do whatever it pleases, whatever the cost to the people, without ever being held accountable for its actions. It will take those voices and use them to write a new law of the land, to take ideas that have proven effective in other countries and use them in a uniquely American way: the No Confidence Amendment.

The No Confidence Amendment, like the 25th Amendment, will add one more check and balance to the Constitution. Like the 13th Amendment that outlawed slavery, it will take effect immediately. Unlike any other amendment to date, it will give power back to the people, but only if they are willing to raise their voices to claim it.

UTW will be distributed in video, audio, and text, in both English and Spanish, to reach as many Americans as possible, as a six-episode miniseries during the week leading up to the nation’s 250th birthday. One episode will be released each day at 7am EDT/4am PDT, starting on Monday, June 29, with the final episode on the morning of Saturday, July 4.

In each episode, host Danielle Church calmly, defiantly, and occasionally profanely walks the audience through a high-level understanding of what has gone wrong in the American government, why it needs to be addressed in such an extraordinary way, and what each person can do to help. UTW is strictly non-partisan, suitable for anyone who is ready for the current trauma to end, regardless of political leaning.

The suggested pronunciation for “Unf*cking”, in cases where the censored title is appropriate, is “Un-effing”. The podcast itself uses the uncensored title.
